Hace más de 3 años y en la penumbra de la onmaket nega (casa del Congreso) de Cangandi, Jorge Ventocilla ofreció a los Kunas "devolverles la información", ya que iniciaba su estudio de campo sobre cacería y subsistencia en el área.

En 1991 diseño, junto con el pintor indígena Ologuagdi, el libro de colorear para niños sobre fauna silvestre de la Comarca. La publicación del mismo contó con el apoyo del Ministerio de Educación por medio de su Oficina de Educación Ambiental y de su Programa de Alfabetización-BID; 2,200 ejemplares se distribuyeron en las escuelas de la Comarca con un mensaje a cada niño pidiendo que pintaran su entorno o su vida cotidiana.

En STRI recibimos más de 200 dibujos acompañados por su texto; los niños nos hablan de sus cocos, de sus aves, de nubes, del trabajo de sus padres en la tierra firme y en el mar. Ahora se han seleccionado 35 ganadores a los cuales se les enviará un premio por correo. Cada concursante, maestro y sáhila de las 8 comunidades participantes recibirá una carta de agradecimiento.

La WWF-Centroamérica ha aportado los fondos para una segunda edición del libro, así que seguiremos haciendo intercambio de dibujos con los niños de Kuna Yala. Lo que muestran estos niños en sus dibujos y textos está ayudándonos a mejorar la calidad y efectividad de nuestros proyectos de educación ambiental en Kuna Yala. Además estamos trabajando en conjunto con los Kunas, nuestros anfitriones en la estación marina de San Blas.

More than 3 years ago in the shade of the onmaket nega or congress house in Cangandi, Jorge Ventocilla offered the Kunas to "give them back the information", which he would compile during his research on subsistence hunting and other activities in the area.

In 1991 he designed, together with Kuna Indian painter Ologuagdi, a children's coloring book on the wildlife of the Kuna Yala Comarca. The Ministry of Education, through its Office of Environmental Education and its Literacy Program-IDB, collaborated with the publication; 2,200 books were distributed to the Comarca schools with a message requesting that the children send in representative drawings of their own environment.

STRI received more than 200 drawings with text; the children wrote of their coconut trees, their birds, clouds and the work of their parents on the mainland and in the sea. Thirty-five winners were chosen and will receive prizes. Each participant, teacher and community leader will also receive a thank-you letter.

The WWF-Central America has given funds for reprinting the coloring book so the interchange of drawings with the Kuna children will continue. The information these children give us in their drawings and writings is of great help in improving the quality and effectiveness of our environmental education projects in Kuna Yala. It is one way of working jointly with the hosts of the STRI marine station in San Blas.

Advice for new construction in Panama City...

A young, vigorous tree need not necessarily be cut if it's in the way of new construction. With modern tree-moving equipment, you can lift desirable specimens and transplant them to other locations. Professional advice is in order here—talk to landscapers or tree surgeons.
