INTRODUCTION

The West Indian reptiles and amphibians are popular subjects of various kinds of biological research. These investigations will benefit greatly from Schwartz and Thomas' (1975) recent checklist, the first taxonomic summary in several decades. The present lists, which started as an ecology class project at the College of the Virgin Islands, are largely a compilation of Schwartz and Thomas' locality records. Our lists are useful in themselves, serve as a geographical index to Schwartz and Thomas, and should encourage more complete documentation of distributions.

627 islands are listed, some without records of reptiles or amphibians. Areas and maximum elevations are given wherever available. We have included everything that has a name, could support terrestrial vertebrates, and was not obviously a rock periodically awash. Even so, the list is far from complete. We have included the islands off the South and Central American coasts, many of which have more or less West Indian faunae and which are frequented by students of Antillean biota. Records from these islands are mostly from sources other than Schwartz and Thomas, as are a few in the Antilles proper. All such records are footnoted.

We have not identified introduced species. Any student of these animals will immediately recognize the obvious introductions and will have personal opinions concerning the many nebulous cases. We did not wish to express our opinions without discussion. The neophyte is referred to Schwartz and Thomas (1975) for their opinions.

It is likely that considerable locality data exist which are not included in these lists. We invite anyone having additions or corrections to send them to us. If there is sufficient response, a second edition will be published. New records could be incorporated in subsequent editions, avoiding the diffuse, one county at a time pattern typical of North American herpetology. We will be glad to list collaborators as co-authors of the edition to which they contribute.

PLEASE COLLABORATE: SEND US RECORDS THAT CAN BE ADDED TO THESE LISTS.
