MASKINONÉ: MASCALLONÉ.

I find that I have got into a very serious scrape by writing the name of this fish in the plural form "Maskonés" in my paper of the last number of the Bulletin, and I hope to see something said upon the so-called "less noun of Maskinongé." It seems to have a claim upon the phonetic rules of the English language, but I have been disappointed in being unable to procure them. Dear Sir—

The name of the trout is that pronounced "Maskinongé" by Prof. Goddard in his "Fishes of the Great Lakes," and I believe that a writer who has used it in the places where it is so pronounced is justified in using it in his own works.

The following are some of the errors which I have observed in the "Fishes of the Great Lakes" by Prof. Goddard: In his list of the fishes he gives the name of the trout as "Maskinongé" and in his list of the names of the species of fish he gives the name of the trout as "Maskinongé." The latter is the correct form, and I hope that it will be used in this way in the future.

The name of the trout is that pronounced "Maskinongé" by Prof. Goddard in his "Fishes of the Great Lakes," and I believe that a writer who has used it in the places where it is so pronounced is justified in using it in his own works.

The following are some of the errors which I have observed in the "Fishes of the Great Lakes" by Prof. Goddard: In his list of the fishes he gives the name of the trout as "Maskinongé" and in his list of the names of the species of fish he gives the name of the trout as "Maskinongé." The latter is the correct form, and I hope that it will be used in this way in the future.

The name of the trout is that pronounced "Maskinongé" by Prof. Goddard in his "Fishes of the Great Lakes," and I believe that a writer who has used it in the places where it is so pronounced is justified in using it in his own works.

The following are some of the errors which I have observed in the "Fishes of the Great Lakes" by Prof. Goddard: In his list of the fishes he gives the name of the trout as "Maskinongé" and in his list of the names of the species of fish he gives the name of the trout as "Maskinongé." The latter is the correct form, and I hope that it will be used in this way in the future.

The name of the trout is that pronounced "Maskinongé" by Prof. Goddard in his "Fishes of the Great Lakes," and I believe that a writer who has used it in the places where it is so pronounced is justified in using it in his own works.

The following are some of the errors which I have observed in the "Fishes of the Great Lakes" by Prof. Goddard: In his list of the fishes he gives the name of the trout as "Maskinongé" and in his list of the names of the species of fish he gives the name of the trout as "Maskinongé." The latter is the correct form, and I hope that it will be used in this way in the future.

The name of the trout is that pronounced "Maskinongé" by Prof. Goddard in his "Fishes of the Great Lakes," and I believe that a writer who has used it in the places where it is so pronounced is justified in using it in his own works.

The following are some of the errors which I have observed in the "Fishes of the Great Lakes" by Prof. Goddard: In his list of the fishes he gives the name of the trout as "Maskinongé" and in his list of the names of the species of fish he gives the name of the trout as "Maskinongé." The latter is the correct form, and I hope that it will be used in this way in the future.

The name of the trout is that pronounced "Maskinongé" by Prof. Goddard in his "Fishes of the Great Lakes," and I believe that a writer who has used it in the places where it is so pronounced is justified in using it in his own works.

The following are some of the errors which I have observed in the "Fishes of the Great Lakes" by Prof. Goddard: In his list of the fishes he gives the name of the trout as "Maskinongé" and in his list of the names of the species of fish he gives the name of the trout as "Maskinongé." The latter is the correct form, and I hope that it will be used in this way in the future.

The name of the trout is that pronounced "Maskinongé" by Prof. Goddard in his "Fishes of the Great Lakes," and I believe that a writer who has used it in the places where it is so pronounced is justified in using it in his own works.

The following are some of the errors which I have observed in the "Fishes of the Great Lakes" by Prof. Goddard: In his list of the fishes he gives the name of the trout as "Maskinongé" and in his list of the names of the species of fish he gives the name of the trout as "Maskinongé." The latter is the correct form, and I hope that it will be used in this way in the future.

The name of the trout is that pronounced "Maskinongé" by Prof. Goddard in his "Fishes of the Great Lakes," and I believe that a writer who has used it in the places where it is so pronounced is justified in using it in his own works.