OREZ MOUNTAIN TROUT.

The opinion is pretty widespread among ichthyologists that the trout of the Ozarks is the commonest fish in the mountainous region of Missouri, Arkansas, and Indiana Territory. It must be remembered, however, that it is but very rarely caught by the common people, and it is the custom for the various streams to be tributary to the Missouri, emptying into the latter stream not far from the mouth of the Osage River. In winter, thousands of these fish are run to market in the Osage Valley, and when the level of the Missouri is low, it is easy to take a large number of them by casting lines into the river. In Spring, when the water is high, and the trout have taken refuge in the backwater at the mouths of the tributaries, the Osage Valley is well supplied with trout of all kinds, and they are caught by all means. WINTER FISHING AT POINT BARROW.

The natives of Point Barrow, Alaska, fish very little, for they don't like to go out and fish for them 2, or three weeks of the year. They do, however, take a few each year, when they go to market, to get some money, and when they go to market, they go to market, and trade their fish for food, and fish are very cheap in Point Barrow. HOw TO CATCH TROUT.

In Mr. Meredith's account of his trip on the Fly-fishing, he tells us that the writer, in his case, has fallen into the common error of believing that the man who catches the fish is called "the fish." Perhaps it is not generally known that "the fish" is a term applied to the person who catches the fish.
